Then and Now

The following Charles Meredith views show the reclaimed area just west of the old Goose Creek bridge in Southold in 1959.

The marsh was diked and filled with the dredged spoils of the creek bottom.

The stink was somewhat unpleasant for the nearby locals, as it took several years to set and dry before lots were drawn up and divided for sale. Several homes now share this area.

It is doubtful this process would be permitted today with so much regulation.

Left photo is a current view showing the same houses across the water from the area that was filled.
